The March 2014 issue of Topics in Integrative Health Care presents articles of interest to clinicians, particularly complementary and alternative health care providers. John Ward, DC, MA, MS, and colleagues investigate the effects of two different sports drinks on performance. Mahesh Sabade, MD, presents an unusual case report describing the beneficial effects of Ayurvedic medicine on a patient with hepatic encephalopathy. Kathryn Hoiiris, DC, and Brent Russell, MS, DC, present a case report in which a patient under chiropractic management for intermittent claudication was appropriately referred by the chiropractic physician for surgical implantation of stents.

We invite readers to contribute to Putting Research into Practice, clinical briefs, and Fast Facts, a feature included in every issue. We also welcome concept proposals for Grand Rounds, in which a complex case is presented and discussants from various disciplines give their perspective on treatment.

We hope you will find something of interest in the journal and that you will share this with others and encourage them to use this valuable online resource.
